The 2010 SSCE Conference will consider the challenges of climate change with a roster of leading international figures from a variety of academic disciplines. In addition to various theologians of note, including Timothy Gorrige, Michael Northcott, Celia Deane-Drummond, and Peter Scott, the conference aims to bring theological ethics into direct discourse with the natural and social sciences. Thus joining this year's conference is the eminent sociologist and former Director of LSE Lord Anthony Giddens, addressing the politics of climate change; and the leading European economist Stefano Zamagni, considering the various economic dimensions of the environmental debate.

The conference costs £199 for SSCE members (£235 for non-members), and includes all food and two nights accommodation in the beautiful surroundings of Cambridge, as well as wine receptions and the Saturday evening conference dinner at Jesus College. Assisted student rates, as well as non-residential rates, are also available. Visit the SSCE website for further details.
